Anreise ins Gastland (Empfehlungen, Schwierigkeiten)
Travelling to the host country (recommendations, difficulties)

Flights to Argentina are currently quite expensive.
Therefore, it is advisable to buy tickets well in advance.

Moving within Argentina is possible via bus.
There are buses called "coche cama" that are very comfortable, which allows for a good rest since the distances between the provinces are long, the country is very large.

There are some train possibilities but they are limited.
Train trips can last more than a day (24 hours).

Leben im Gastland (Kultur, Unterkunft, Öffentlicher Transport, Essen, Lebenskosten)
Life in the host country (culture, accommodation, public transport, food, costs of living)

The people of Mendoza are very friendly. They are very attentive and gentle people. If you have any questions, anyone will be willing to help you. The city of Mendoza is very beautiful. The climate is quite hot and dry. Little rain. However, it is very easy to get to the mountains, and see the snow-capped Andes mountain ranges (in winter). It is a city that receives a lot of tourism (national and international): in winter for its sky slopes, in summer for its grape harvest festival, and in general all year round for its landscapes and wines. The province of Mendoza is famous for its wines. So there are very good wines to try and at a very affordable price. In general, in Argentina, a lot of beef is eaten with salads, many pastas and pizzas (due to the strong Italian influence), empanadas of all kinds, and a lot of ice cream. In my case, I rented a room in a local house. That gave me the possibility of having someone to share mates with at breakfast, chat about the city and its culture.

The city of Mendoza has a fairly large National University with several branches of research. However, my doctoral work was developed independently, that is, I did not participate in specific courses at the National University of Cuyo.

My work schedule was established in relation to the availability of the people I was interested in interviewing. And also, to the availability of specific classes (in dance) that I was interested in attending.

People speak in Spanish but being a city of international tourism you can also hear a lot of Portuguese and English on the streets.

In general, person-to-person contact (that is, meeting others) enables one to learn about events, places, and spaces for research. People, in general, are very curious and collaborative. These particularities make it easier to access certain information of interest.
